Love is all around: Showtime reboots an old favorite with 'The L Word: Generation Q'

By Breanna Henry
TV Media

Showtime has always been up for taking a risk. A drug-dealing suburban mom and an awkwardly heroic serial killer were widely considered too objectionable for audiences in 2005, yet "Weeds" and "Dexter" both skyrocketed to phenom status (along with their casts and creators) when Showtime took a chance on them. More recent series such as "Shameless" and "Ray Donovan" have continued the trend.

Major networks have declined to even glance at many of the series Showtime has greenlit, and over the years, the network's open-mindedness and forward-thinking have turned those shows into mainstream cultural sensations. On Sunday, Dec. 8, Showtime is taking a new kind of chance. For the first time ever, the network is reviving one of its own unexpected hits, as "The L Word: Generation Q" brings the 2004 original series "The L Word" into the modern era. Fans of the old show will be ecstatic to see the return of original cast members, and new fans will appreciate the rise of brand-new breakout stars.

"The L Word" was an hour-long drama featuring an ensemble cast of women. The series followed a diverse group of 20-somethings as they went about their daily lives in West Hollywood trying to navigate their many (often disastrous) relationships. Showtime has never been one to shy away from sexuality in its programs, and "The L Word" was no exception; what was different about the show was that all of the main characters, and most other characters, were part of the LGBTQ community.

The women of "The L Word" were a varied bunch — some were open and proud, some were curious, questioning or closeted, and the series showed audiences that gay women were not all cut from the same cloth, and that they definitely didn't all look like Ellen DeGeneres (though many would be pleased as punch if they did). The fictional characters of "The L Word" were living the kinds of vastly differing lives and partaking in the different types of relationships that real-life queer women were, with a whole lot of dramatic flare thrown in to keep viewers hooked.

"The L Word: Generation Q" features the return of original series stars Jennifer Beals ("Flashdance," 1983), indie-pop musician Leisha Hailey ("Dead Ant," 2017) and actor Katherine Moennig ("Ray Donovan") as Bette Porter, Alice Pieszecki and Shane McCutcheon, respectively. A few new actresses and actors also get the chance to shine in this sequel, including Jacqueline Toboni ("Grimm") as an executive assistant named Sarah; Arienne Mandi ("In the Vault") as Bette's new lover, Dani; and Leo Sheng ("Adam," 2019) as Micah, a professor. The return of Beals, Pieszecki and Moennig gives fans high hopes for the revival; since "The L Word" was such a big part of these women's careers, signing on signals their belief in the script Showtime has put together.

While Shane, Bette and Alice were on the air from 2004 to 2009, "The L Word" was THE show for lesbian, queer and questioning television audiences. The year before "The L Word" premiered, only two of 674 female characters on prime-time television (0.2%) were lesbians, and the queer community was crying out for more representation.

That's not to say this show was perfect in its representation, or even that it lived up to the responsibility it had. No one on "The L Word" ever seemed to have to go to work, everyone seemed to be rich (even Shane, the drug-taking, hypersexual hairdresser), and everyone was involved in some kind of affair all of the time, usually with each other. Still, it was a far cry from the LGBTQ tropes running rampant on network television in the preceding years.

The important thing is that "The L Word" broke ground for the shows that came after it, including Netflix's cross-culturally popular "Orange Is the New Black" (created by "Weeds" creator Jenji Kohan, yet another reason to thank Showtime) and CW's newest Arrowverse series, "Batwoman." Showtime is finally getting the chance to bring the dated stereotypes and the oft-problematic storylines of "The L Word" into the modern age with "Generation Q"; selecting L.A. Outfest award winner Marja-Lewis Ryan as showrunner gives the show a promising start.

There were six seasons and multiple spinoffs of "The L Word," which was unabashedly serialized with almost no episodic gratuities. Luckily, new viewers can watch a relatively short recap of the entire series on YouTube, and you will have to suffer through the cringe-inducing theme song ("The L Word" by Betty) at least once to really understand the pain of those who watched it when it aired.

There is a whole lot to catch up on: the series began with an affair, ended with a murder and was not lacking in dramatics anywhere in between. The new series is sure to be full of similar flare, but its characters should be a little more down to earth. Tune in to the series premiere of "The L Word: Generation Q" when it airs Sunday, Dec. 8, on Showtime.

The Kitchen

FOOD 11:00 am

Hosts Jeff Mauro, Geoffrey Zakarian, Katie Lee and Sunny Anderson create a holiday menu inspired by their own family traditions in this new episode. The menu features a Moroccan-spiced pork rack paired with a delicious spinach and three cheese phyllo pie.

Krampus

FX 1:30 pm

This Christmas horror-comedy stars Toni Collette and Adam Scott as the parents of a young boy, Max (Emjay Anthony), who loses his Christmas spirit, causing the Austrian folklore demon called Krampus to be summoned and terrorize them.

Toni Collette and Emjay Anthony star in "Krampus"

Gremlins

AMC 8:30 am

When inventor buys an unusual pet for his son, he unwittingly unleashes a riot of predatory gremlins on an unsuspecting Midwestern town in this 80s classic. They struggle to stop the mayhem before the nasty critters devour everything and ruin Christmas.

Miss Universe Pageant

WFXB 7:00 pm

Steve Harvey hosts the show live from Atlanta, Georgia. Cheer on your favorite competitor and see if she will win the crown being passed down from last year's winner, Catriona Gray of the Philippines.

Last Chance for Christmas

LIFE 4:00 pm

When Prancer is injured, Santa's stablehand must find another reindeer in this holiday movie. He soon finds the perfect replacement, but the reindeer belongs to a girl and her mother. Gabriel Hogan, Tim Matheson and Hilarie Burton star.

Beat Shazam

WFXB 8:00 pm

Jamie Foxx may change how you feel about sitting on Santa's lap in this holiday episode. Santa Jamie is set to fill someone's stocking with a whole lot of cash by testing their knowledge of Christmas classic tunes and pop hits as his daughter Corinne DJs.

American Housewife

WTVD WPDE 8:00 pm

This Christmastime, Katie (Katy Mixon) is looking forward to sharing a special tradition with her daughter, Taylor (Meg Donnelly). But a surprise visit from her mother, Kathryn (Wendie Malick), threatens to drown her holiday cheer.

The 88th Annual Hollywood Christmas Parade

WWMB 8:00 pm

Hollywood Boulevard is home to the largest Christmas parade in America, hosted by Erik Estrada, Laura McKenzie, Dean Cain and Montel Williams. This isn't your hometown parade, it has live music, inflatable character balloons and cars filled with celebs.

"American Housewife" star Katy Mixon

THANK YOU FOR YOUR CONTINUOUS SUPPORT.
